

Daimonie As An Evaluative in Homer: A Pragmatics Based Account

Paul Brown

Monday, November 12 at 3:00

Faner 2083

Andromakhe is addressing her valiant and doomed husband, Hector.

And Andromakhe stood next to him, wept, took his hand and addressed him and spoke.

"Δαιμόνιε, that force of yours will destroy you. Don't you care about your infant son or me, ill-fated, who will lose you right away since the Akhaians will soon all gather together and cut you down?"

1. Pick the proper translation of δαιμόνιε (daimonie) in the passage above.

- a. Possessed,
- b. Admirabile,
- c. Étonnant,
- d. Du Böser Mann,
- e. Dude!
- f. Jesus!

Eros, a daimon (and red herring)